

Much of the conventional thinking about future war is superficial and flawed. In New Guard No Guard, Brigadier General Guy Hazoot provides a corrective to that thinking. Drawing on personal experience and understanding of history. The implication for the United States and other nations is that the pursuit of technological advantage in long range capabilities should not come at the expense of ensuring that ground forces can conduct combined arms maneuver; secure territory, populations, and resources; and consolidate military gains to achieve sustainable political outcomes

H.R. McMaster, Lieut. Gen. (USA, ret.), author of CTBD Dereliction of Duty, Battlegrounds, and At War with Ourselves